

Quiz: Identifying Argument Parts

Before engaging with complex arguments across published texts, students will practice identifying important aspects of argumentation based on given terminal argument examples. For each argument example, students will identify the following:

- the argument's claim
- the reasoning provided for the claim
- support/evidence for the reasoning in support of the claim

For extra credit, students may also supply what warrants the argument, which will help them think about the implied aspects of the claim upon which the argument rests. Thinking this way will be a valuable skill to develop throughout the modules, primarily as students evaluate arguments supporting their research or begin making their own arguments.
